Northern Conservation

From the Petersburg Express. It is astonishing how much weakness is exhibited by many people of the South in credit ing the Northern conservatives (so called,) with a disposition for a peaceful adjustment of this struggie. There could not be a more groundless or absurd idea. The most that we could possibly expect to gain by a political resolution at the North, which would transfer the control the government from the Abolitionists to their opponents, would be, perhaps, the infusion of a ittle more civilization and decence y in the mostof conducting heatilities. There is certainly a very wide margin for improvement on the part of the Yankees in this particular, and for the sake of humanity we should be glad of any change which would lead to such improvement since a really brave and chivalrous soldier always prefers fighting a foe like himself, to a rothan or a thief, or a brute. War is thus stripped or many of its horrors, as when two opposing ar-

whose tendency is to soften down the bitterness of the strifs and agreeably diversify it in this way with pleasing and honorable episodes.

To show how conservatism is really werking at the North, we have only to turn the record of its sayings and doings. The political contest now going on in the State of New York, may be fairly considered a very good test of the spirit and intentions of the party amongst whose leaders ex Governor Seymour and John Van Buren are the most conspicuous. Whatever acting on the foolish and foregone conclusion speak and purpose, it may be safely taken for these two eminent opponents of the abolitionists Fitz John Porter will be taken up.

These speakers denounced in a very severe manner the emancipation policy of Lincoln, and also the spirit and aim in and for which the abolitionists are now using the government and shaping the war. This is well enough, and we cheerfully second all the merit to these denunciations that can be claimed for thom. But let us see what they respectively say in the same breath about the war itself. The following passage from Seymour's speech is sufrious and infamous trick of Lincoln and Seward

We need not cumber our article with further axtracts. Enough, we think, may be seen in the above passages to satisfy avery Southern mind that if these men speak with sincerity-i It is a resolution of this sort which is the best | they really mean what they say -- we will be just as near peace with the radicals as with the conservatives in power-and for one, we say we do determination to resist the enemy to the last ex-tremity is the only sure source of the confidence.
